CONTENT CREATION

Content creation changes how we use media and connect with other people. Today, many young people follow influencers. These influencers share their lives, ideas, and talents on platforms like Instagram, YouTube, and TikTok. They reach millions by posting videos, photos, and stories about topics like beauty, fashion, gaming, sports, and everyday life.

For many young people, influencers are role models. They can give advice, show skills, or share personal challenges. But influencers also sometimes show a “perfect” lifestyle with expensive products and edited photos. This can pressure teens to look or live like them, affecting their self-esteem.

Influencers also impact on shopping habits. Many influencers promote products in their content. Their followers follow their recommendations and want to buy these products, creating a new form of advertising.

But not all influence is negative. Many influencers talk about important issues like mental health, climate change, and equality inspiring young people to learn more, help others, for example.

The effect of influencers on young people is strong and complex. Influencers can inspire and entertain but it’s important for young viewers to think critically and remember that social media doesn’t always reflect reality.
